

How long do Museum Visitors look at Art?
– 10huonetta: Heroes of Art –series.

This is a "sketchy study", which shows the time visitors of the Ateneum Art Museum (Finnish National Gallery) in Helsinki, Finland spend looking at individual paintings/sketches by Pablo Picasso (1881–1973). The study measures "Singular Artwork Time" which means the time individual people spend looking at individual paintings/sketches. Also the time people spend reading the titles (of some works) was measured. The study is published openly under the <http://oree.storijapan.net/cool/> license in the framework of "10huonetta: Heroes of Art –series" by Pietari Kylmälä, Henna Tanskanen and Eero Yli-Vakkuri. The project is produced and funded by Circus Maximus (2012).

This study is to be understood as a "mere prototype or a sketch of a study". This is because data on visitor behaviour was not collected in a methodologically accurate manner. The study was not intended to become a detailed dataset and analysis of museum visitor behaviour.. It was (and is) motivated by self-interest of a performance artist, wanting to learning how long people look at paintings. Because of this museum visitor behaviour patterns where not defined beforehand and it was NOT articulated what counts as "looking at an artwork". Does one have to 'see' an artwork to 'look' at it? A bias "common sense" approach was used. The time visitors focused on a specific painting was measured (glimpses where not counted).

Defining "Common Sense Approach to Visitor Painting Gaze Time":

A. If the subject halted, posed as s/he was looking at art
(People often assume a pose when they want to appear as they are looking at art. //The pose indicates that the person should not be disturbed.)
"Singular Artwork Time" was measured.

B. If the subject walked directly towards an artwork, clearly looking at it "Singular Artwork Time" was measured, even if the subject did not halt.

C. If the person in the presence of the painting, ended up looking at something non-art (mobile-phone, friends) the stop-watch was halted. Measurement was continued if the subjects focus returned to the artwork.

D. If a subject remained in the proximity of the artwork but did not directly "look at it", "Singular Artwork Time" was not measured.
Similar unclear cases where not measured.

For similar studies it will be obligatory to define in detail what counts as looking at an artwork. The presence of groups and pedagogical content, present a challenge. While a person might not be directly looking at an artwork s/he may be discussing it with members of a group. Also visitors focus might drift into singular artwork related pedagogical material (audiobooks, catalogues etc.). Would such add to "Singular Artwork Time"?

In this case only artworks which were installed on walls, so that it was "difficult" to look at other works simultaneously where measured.
Measurements were conducted around seven different paintings/sketches.
"Femme à l oreiller (Jacqueline) 10.07.69" (<http://www.pablo-ruiz-picasso.net/work-513.php>), "Enfant jouant avec camion 27.07.53", "Femme lisant 9.1.1935", "Mandoline sur une table (1924)" (<http://www.pablo-ruiz-picasso.net/work-2344.php>), "Buste d'homme à la Cigarette (1964)", "Portrait de Dora Maar (1937)" (<http://www.wikipaintings.org/en/pablo-picasso/portrait-of-dora-maar-1937-1>), "Le Baiser (26.10.1969)" (<http://www.flickr.com/photos/artimageslibrary/3761251325/>).

The "Singular Artwork Time" of 571 visitors and the time 128 visitors spend reading the titles of the works was measured. The average time was 13,78 seconds per painting out of which 3,31 seconds was spent reading the title. This adds to 10.47 seconds per artwork. The data in the study was measured using a mobile phone stop-watch, operated discreetly in the proximity of the painting and museum visitor under study. After the "Singular Artwork Time" of guests was measured it was marked on a analog notepad by hand. The gender and company of subjects looking at art was also marked. The gender data can be used to validate that the proportions of guest (by gender) corresponds to analysis of guests made by the museum.

The works were a part of a Picasso exhibition presenting some 200 works. The exhibition was the largest blockbuster exhibition ever held in Finland. Ateneum Art Museum had some 314 755 visitors. It was open 18.09.2009 – 28.01.2010. The works were on loan from "Musée national Picasso Paris". The study was conducted between 19.9.2009–3.1.2010 as I was employed by Finnish National Gallery as an Museum Attendant (see work description by a colleague <http://ihatepicasso.wordpress.com/>). The task of measuring "Singular Artwork Time" was my personal past time activity and was not in any way endorsed (or talked of) with senior museum customer service staff. The study was discussed with some colleagues like Pietari Kylmälä who also began to measure "Singular Artwork Time". However data Kylmälä produced is not added to this study. I also kept a daily work journal but it's not public yet. More on the blockbuster exhibition: <http://www.ateneum.fi/fi/pablo-picasso>)

The data is accurate but this study only gives only an estimate on "the time people spend watching at paintings by Picasso". For further study it is recommended that the following ideas are taken into consideration.

1. Museum visitors should be followed from the moment they enter the museum and their entire exhibition behaviour observed. People do not watch "all of the paintings" in an exhibition and spend more time focused on specific works. It should be calculated how many paintings people actually watch. The "Time People Spend in the Museum" could be cross-referenced to "Singular Artwork Time" for evaluating how accurate "Singular Artwork Time" is.

2. Time people spend in a single room should be calculated. This "Total Room Time" should be cross-referenced to "Singular Artwork Time".

3. Different exhibitions in the same museum should be studied; To cross-reference exhibition architecture effects on "Singular Artwork Time".

4. If a particular painting is featured in museum marketing or pedagogical content – How does this effect "Singular Artwork Time"?

Future researchers should invest in creating an application for mobile-phones, which can be used for inserting data on site. The application should feature a simple stop-watch and an intuitive interface for inserting other data. It would be best that the application could offer haptic feedback. This way it could be operated from inside the pocket of the observer. Also the collected data would be natively digital and easily further processed – Possibly in real time.

The data could also be collected from museum visitors directly. Example. A mobile-phone application could be programmed which would collect sensor input data from device accelerometers, digital compass, gps, other proximity sensors, audio input (collecting visitor chatter volume etc.). This data could be used to see what kinds of patterns visitors go through during an exhibition.

The simplest variation would be to offer a preconfigured mobile-phone for visitors to be used as an audio guide. Visitors would then trigger tracks of the audio guides using reading QR codes or NFC. After activation the application would also collect data on visitor behaviour. The application could also run spontaneous queries, questionnaires during the museum visit. Answering queries could add up to credits to be used in the museum cafeteria.
